He aided, by his vote, a band of political bushwhackers. He feared America might not get all that was coning to her. He feared some of those who wrote the treaty might not understand it and he, Senator Park Trammell, and others of that demngogue class, wanted "interpretative reservations" made. So that Europe would understand how we understood it. And the gang he was with wanted to place America first and foremost without regard to the others.

Under the cloak of a pseudo-"Americanism," loyalty to our Allies in the bloodiest battle ever fought for freedom is assassinated. Justiy anxious humanity is presented won a treaty laid out for burial as winter comes to the help of uprooting Discontent in Europe. The wheels of incustry, the channels of trade, the mainsprings of finance, have awaited word from opulent and gitruistic America to resume business at full speed. They have marveled at our delay. Now they are struck with a deadening paralysis at the light-hearted manner in which our most august Chamber tears up the work of six months in paris and then gayly adjourns;

And again and again he cites the views of rave our wings? To propose any novel scheme is to others in the Senate, and not his own as a reason far startle at once a swarm of doubting Thomases and carpvoling with the crowd that killed the treaty while the wounded world still bleeds.

This is not American. It is not intelligent. It is not officient. It party prejudice and personal vanity ould have been eliminated from the discussions, it would case, and could they look ahead to what will be they will never have occurred. If attention had been concentrated be equally provoked to mirth. We behold over the rim day. For the first conference, it will be remembered, was criticized not because it was a group conference, but because those who were supposed to represent each of the three groups were ewed as not altogether typical of their groups, and, albecause large groups of people, such as the farmers and the small business man, and the unorganized worker generally, were either not represented at all or wre represented so indiretly as to arouse thier criticism and sus-

In other words, the first conference was considered too little representative, though it was composed of many practicol men, to solve really the broader, national issues, even if it had been able to secure some common labor action from the industrial groups. But the new conferees are even more unrepresentative of the actual industrial Delivered Anywhere in the City By Carrier for 15 Cents groups which do exist in the country and whose differences are to be adjusted. And it is difficult to see how these conferees are to reconcile these great groups and how they are to say anything more to the country than has been said by all sorts of publicists ever since the question of a better understanding between labor, organizal and unorganized, and capital came up for discussion. to one will desire to see the conference come to naught; but when what the country wants is an immediate practical solution of a condition, not a theory, it hardly will view the new conferees, considered collectively, with any legree of enthusiasm.

DERIDING WHAT IS NEW.

It is so easy to pour contempt on what is strange to The first impulse of human nature is to deny the existence of that which has not come within our own experlence. The invention will not work because we never Senator Trammeil has written a placidly politic explain saible because it breaks a rule. The fact is not a fact saue a sweeping denial because our senses have not prochief us with corroborative evidence.

The philosopher Engehot finds that to a large number people a new idea gives positive pain. Education notis unrest. It makes us malcontents. We have seen mething better than what we are, but we hate to admit that it is better. Improvement is possible, and it is not pleasant to discover that we are not perfect. Let us, Accefore, shut the door on ameliorative alteration. We g satisfied with what we are. The knowledge we have acquired suffices for all our wants. More would destroy a blasful state of innocence which lets us think we have thing important to learn.
